If you are still thinking of voting Conservative, read this

Conservative candidate Walter Pamic says he's for low taxes and small government.

But what he doesn't mention is his business has collected over $400,000 in contracts from the federal government since declaring his intention to run for Canada's governing party earlier this year.

Pamic is an Ottawa-area Conservative candidate, but he's also a man of many hats: small business owner, chair of an anti-union lobby group and erstwhile witness at parliamentary committee hearings.

That's worth noting because the small company where Pamic serves as Director and Vice President, Power-Tek Capital Services, was awarded at least $404,682.57 in government contracts since declaring his intent to run for the Conservatives in January 2015.

Is a Canada Revenue Agency landlord avoiding taxes via offshore havens?

Published by the National Observer, Written by Bruce Livesey in News | October 15th 2015
Canada's 2015 Federal Election Campaign

The Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) rents office space from a Vancouver-based property developer - a company that exploits offshore tax havens in Lichtenstein, the British Virgin Islands and Channel Islands.

Larco Investments Ltd. owns three buildings in Montreal, Calgary and Edmonton where they rent office space to the CRA. Larco purchased the buildings from the federal government in 2007.

Yet evidence has emerged that Larco takes advantage of offshore tax havens. "It's interesting to us that as a government landlord, that's also the landlord of the CRA, when the CRA is supposed to be going after this (offshore) stuff... it just raises questions about whether the CRA is aware," says Michelle Travis, research co-ordinator of UNITE HERE Canada, the hospitality and hotel worker's union which represents workers employed by Larco.

Dear Sisters and Brothers,

Thank you! With your help sharing, tweeting, commenting and talking about our Larco Investments video, we have gotten the word out!

We had a question for Larco, for the Minister of National Revenue, and for the Canadian government. Our question was simply this: "Do you believe that it is ok for a federal landlord's owner to be using tax havens, and what message does this send to the average Canadian taxpayer?"

We couldn't have gotten this message out without your help, but because of your support, we managed, over social media, to reach over 100,000 people, even without any traditional media coverage.

We would like to share with you the first article about this issue. "Is a Canada revenue Agency landlord Avoiding Taxes via Offshore Havens?" published by the National Observer. We have no doubt that it was the online buzz, followed by people taking their questions to community meetings, that showed the media that people care deeply about this issue. Hundreds of people are still helping us continue to ask our question, at all-candidates meetings, and online, even while we are still not receiving any answers from either the company or the government.

Thank you for standing with UNITE HERE! and sharing our concerns with your network.

In Solidarity,
Robert Demand
